Special Court links Taylor to Sept. 11 bombing

A confidential report from the UN-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone has implicated former Liberian president Charles Taylor of selling conflict diamonds to known al-Qaeda operatives.

The report states that the said diamonds were used to finance the September 11 attacks on the United States.

Special Court Chief Prosecutor David Crane, who prepared the document, alleges that Al-Qaeda has been operating in West Africa since September 1998 and had maintained a continuous presence in the region through 2002.

John Melanie, former US ambassador to Sierra Leone, says "The United States never perceived itself to have a strategic interest in sub-Saharan Africa on the terrorism front until very recently." He said the development of a functioning criminal state in West Africa is not a secret to anyone who has been in the region.

They allege that Taylor had dealings with Abdullah Ahmed Abdullah, a top al-Qaeda player included on the US Federal Bureau of Investigation's most wanted list, and Ibrahim Balla, a top RUF commander who served as an intermediary between the RUF leadership and Taylor. Balla is said to have arranged with Taylor for Abdullah to pay millions of dollars worth of diamonds mined in Sierra Leone.

US officials further allege that Taylor facilitated the smuggling of blood diamonds with the aid of Sarith Osaily and Azzz Nassour, both of whom are in custody of the

Lawyers gang up to extradite Charles Taylor From Nigeria

Bar leaders from West African sub-region at the weekend, gathered in Abuja, to work out the possible extradition of the former Liberian Head Of State, Charles Gbangbey Taylor from Nigeria where he is currently staying on exile to stand trial before the Special Court in Sierra Leone, reports allAfrica.com. The bar leaders including the President of African Bar Association cum Speaker of Republic of Ghana Parliament, Peter Ala Adjetey, are also to establish a West African Bar Association (WABA) for the promotion of the rule of law, fundamental human rights and democracy in West Africa. The association delegates which met in Abuja last Saturday also

The former Liberian leader is to stand trial before the Special Court in Sierra Leone on charges of rape, murder, enslavement and pillage during the ten-year civil conflict in Sierra Leone.

The Nigerian government said it would not hand over Taylor to the Sierra Leone court. To take the decision with him are five other newly elected executive members of WABA, including Messrs. Waidi Mustapha, the association’s Secretary-general, Paul Adu Gyamfi its first Vice President, Abdul Camara, its second Vice President, Councillor Marcus Jones, its and Mrs Ogugu Ipese, a deputy Secretary of the association. The quartet of Abdul, Waidi, Paul and Marcus are bar leaders of Benin, Ghana and Liberia respectively while Ogugu is the out-going second assistant Secretary of the Nigeria Bar Association. The association is also to see the provision of improved legal service in the public including efficient legal aid services to the poor in the sub-region.

Obasanjo May Surrender Taylor

Pressure is building on Obasajo to surrender former Liberian President Charles Taylor to the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Two Nigerian businessmen amputated by RUF rebels in Sierra Leone and the Nigerian Union of Journalists (NUJ) have filed separate suits in the Abuja High Court challenging the asylum granted to Taylor by the Nigerian government a year ago.

"We want Taylor face the music in Sierra Leone and realize the consequences of his actions when he was Liberian head of state", NUJ president Smart Adeyemi said.

The Court is expected to rule on the NUJ vs Taylor suit by the end of the month.

Obasanjo expressed disapproval to hand Taylor over to the Special Court on the grounds that his continued exile in Calabar is vital to the continuing peace process in Liberia.

But US Ambassador to Nigeria John Campbell says the United States is continuing dialogue with Obasanjo on how to create the context in which Taylor's extradition may happen.

"The US is grateful to Obasanjo for the role he and Nigeria's peacekeeping troops have played in Liberia, and Washington has been careful not to be seen to be bullying its ally," Campbell said.

Al-Qaeda, Charles Taylor partners in blood diamonds, says SLeone war court

by Lauren Gelfand

DAKAR, Aug 22 (AFP) - Former Liberian president Charles Taylor sold conflict diamonds to known al-Qaeda operatives that may have been used to finance the September 11 attacks on the United States, according to a confidential report from the UN-backed war crimes court in Sierra Leone.

"It is clear that al-Qaeda had been in west Africa since September 1998 and maintained a continuous presence in the area through 2002," said the document, produced by the office of prosecutor David Crane.

The document, gleaned from press reports, witnesses to sightings of al-Qaeda operatives in Liberia and interviews with a single, unnamed source, is the latest effort to link the global terror network to conflict diamonds mined during the civil war that ravaged the west African state for a decade.

But more tellingly, according to Washington Post reporter Douglas Farah, who first revealed many of the links between Taylor and the terror group, it shows the flagrant intelligence shortfalls in truly understanding al-Qaeda's connections to Africa.

"The United States has not perceived itself to have a strategic interest in sub-Saharan Africa on the terrorism front until very recently," Farah said in an August 5 interview with allAfrica.com.

"The development not only in Liberia of a functioning criminal state is not a secret to anyone who has been to the region or who lives in the region. The whole scenario is part of the neglect by the outside world."

What it is not, said former US ambassador to Sierra Leone Joseph Melrose, is a smoking gun.

"You can't say it hasn't happened, but you can't prove evidence in court because it is circumstantial evidence," he told AFP by telephone from Pennsylvania.

"But there is a long tradition in the diamond sector (of shady dealings) and they have to acknowledge that some of these blood diamonds could be terror diamonds."

Taylor, a warlord who rose to the presidency in 1997 after a seven-year rebellion, is at the center of the intricate relations between al-Qaeda and Sierra Leone's Revolutionary United Front rebels.

Citing the watchdog group Global Witness, the document states that Taylor's government "facilitated access for al-Qaeda operatives into Sierra Leone and Liberia in exchange for diamonds and weapons."

According to US officials quoted in an August 4 article by the Boston Globe, Taylor was also paid protection money by al-Qaeda operatives, among them Ahmed Khalfan Ghailani, a Tanzanian national who was arrested July 25 in Pakistan after a blazing gunbattle.

Ghailani, a key planner in Osama bin Laden’s network, is accused of masterminding the 1998 US embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania.

The court dossier alleges he met several times in 1999 with Charles Taylor at his residence in Monrovia, around the time of an armed uprising to rid Liberia of Taylor that finally ended in August last year.

Another top al-Qaeda player with connections to Liberia is Abdullah Ahmed Abdullah, a senior financial officer included on the US Federal Bureau of Investigation’s most wanted list.

Witnesses told the Washington Post that he arrived in Liberia in September 2000 and established a good relationship with Ibrahim Bah, a top RUF commander who served as a go-between between the RUF leadership and Taylor.

The dossier’s most voluble source, who remains unidentified, said that it was Bah who arranged for Abdullah to buy millions of dollars worth of diamonds from Taylor that had been mined in Sierra Leone.

Those diamonds were smuggled out through channels arranged by Taylor or Samih Ossaily and Aziz Nassour, both of whom are in custody in Belgium awaiting trial for their shady dealings in Sierra Leone.

Taylor, a US-educated preacher who has long boasted that he was an agent of the US Central Intelligence Agency, has so far eluded trial at the war crimes court on charges he trained and armed the rebels who launched their uprising from Liberia in 1991.

Massive international pressure sent Taylor into exile in Nigeria, where President Olusegun Obasanjo has steadfastly resolved to keep him until Liberia itself reclaims the former warlord for trial at its own war crimes court.

Court observers say the dossier presented by Crane to the US commission investigating the September 11 attacks was a bid to boost pressure on the US government to force Nigeria to hand Taylor over for trial.

But the commission did not heed the report, going so far as to deny that there was "no persuasive evidence that al-Qaeda funded itself by trading in African conflict diamonds."

"Try as they might, they just can't get Taylor," a Western diplomat told AFP. "They even throw out the al-Qaeda connection and they still can't get him."
Special Court Investigator
bailed Le10 million

Special Court Investigator

Peter Halloran and two other accused persons—Sheku Fofanah and Abdul Fofanah—were yesterday granted bail of Le10 million each, including two sureties who are senior citizens of Sierra Leone, permanently resident in the Western Area. Also, the accused persons must report to the nearest Police station at Tum, and Magistrate Shyllon made these pronouncements at the Freetown Magistrate Court No. 3, after a testimony by the Special Court Associate Criminal Investigator—Mandy Cordwell. In Cordwell's testimony, she identified the first and second accused persons—Peter Halloran and Sheku Fofanah, respectively, the third accused she said. 'I do not know... She explained that she had known the first accused-Peter Halloran since March this year when they were recruited for employment at the Special Court on the same day and that the Peter Halloran is his boss and are of the same nationality. She went on, 'We arrived in Sierra Leone the same day and Mr. Halloran and I subsequently agreed to share a house in Freetown.' She stated that they took a residence at the beginning of March this year. With respect to the second accused person—Sheku Fofanah, she explained that she had known him since March this year, adding that they first met at the house of one of her Special Court colleagues located at Foday Sankoh Drive. She went on to say that the second accused was then employed at the residence as the generator attendant. She further explained that the second accused—Sheku Fofanah—agreed to take them around to find accommodation and that he later asked her whether she could be employed as a housekeeper. She went on, 'I discussed the matter with Ralph Lapter and Charren Holts' who also live in the same house. The second accused said the company commenced work at the beginning of May this year. Cordwell recalled the evening of May this year when she had a conversation with the first accused in the living room of their residence, wherein the accused disclosed that the second accused had asked him to give consideration in employing the other family members. She stated, 'Specifically, the second accused had asked the first accused if he would employ his younger brother as a security guard in the house and to give consideration to employing the younger sister as a nanny.' She further explained that she had been aware previously that the first accused was looking for a nanny to look after his two-year-old son, who both were expected to arrive in this country sometime in June.' She explained further that sometime in May at around 1:00 am, after a night's sleep, she went home and found the first accused, second accused together with the second accused's two younger sisters and younger brother sitting in the living room engaged in a discussion. She further explained that on Monday 31st May leaving the house with the first accused, she saw a small girl sitting on a chair near the door of the residence and that later this little girl walked into the rear door and got into the house. The first accused stated told her that it was the second accused's sister and that the girl had employed her as nanny. Adding that the girl was at the house to be taught sign language. She further explained that she cautioned the first accused to be mindful of security and privacy. She said he replied that he was a bit extreme, as none of the other colleagues had complained about her. She continued on 2nd June, she stated, upon arriving home, one of the ground staff asked her to ensure that all of the water pumps in each of the bedrooms were locked. Entering the room of the first accused she explained, 'I saw the younger sister of the second accused setting beside the bed eating cassava leaves.' After checking the pump at the bathroom, she said that she then asked the girl how long she had been there and that she replied since Monday. Shortly later, the first accused arrived and went upstairs. She explained that when she went up stairs to collect her mobile phone, she noticed that the lights were out in the room of the first accused. On the 3rd of June she stated, at about 9:00 pm, she was speaking with Mr. Ralph in the kitchen when the first accused came in—explaining further that she went up stairs, opened the door of the first accused and saw the younger sister of the second accused without the girl noticing her. At this stage the State Council-S. A. Bah called for an adjournment. Defence Lawyer Jenkins Johnson for the first accused renewed his bail application, which was followed by A. Kariebe and M.S. Turay's application for bail for the second and third accused persons respectively. State Council raised no objection to the bail but stated issues the bench should take into consideration if bail is granted. However, the bail was granted the matter was adjourned for further hearing.

LE 10M BAIL FOR PROBER HALLORAN!

THE UN'S Special Court police investigator Peter Halloran was yesterday granted a ten million bail at the Freetown Magistrate Court No 3 presided over by Magistrate Shyfon.

Halloran is standing trial for alleged sexual abuse of a 13 year-old girl, the Australian special court police had employed as a nanny at his Wilberforce residence.

Special Court associate criminal investigator Nandi Cordwell testified in court that he had met the 13 year-old girl after he returned from job on Monday May 31 this year and upon inquiry, Halloran had told him that he had employed the girl as a nanny through her brother.

He testified also that he had met the 13 year-old sitting on Halloran's bed and eating together from the same plate.

UN's Halloran, two Sierra Leoneans Charged

Demba Kani Daramy Reports

It will be recalled that Peter Halloran an Australian and employee of the U.N. backed Special Court in Sierra Leone was charged to court last week for allegedly raping a girl under the age fifteen.

The presiding magistrate C.B. Shyillon refused him bail on the ground that the case was serious and it is not normal for the court in Sierra Leone to grant bail to accused persons on first appearance in court.

Yesterday, August 24, the case against the U.N. investigator Peter Halloran took a dramatic turn perhaps for the worst because two other people, Sheku Fofannah and Abdul Eofannah were brought to court as Peter's accomplices and the three of them were slammed with four count charges against the previous three charges against Halloran last week. The charges are, conspiracy, procuring a girl under age of 14, unlawful carnal knowledge, and indecent assault.

On the same day, the first witness in the case Madam Lee Cordwell an Australian and Special Court employee herself like first accused, Peter Halloran testified in court.

Madam Cordwell explained that on the 29th of May this year she saw the second accused, Sheku Fofannah taking the victim to Peter for employment as a domestic servant. The Australian woman also explained in court that on a particular day when she returned to the flat, which she shares with the first accused, Peter, after work, she met the victim in Peters Bedroom eating some food.

She further testified that on that day Peter met her down stairs and made his way upstairs and returned later for dinner and again left for his room at around 22:00 Hrs pm. for bed.

According to madam Cordwell, she met the room of Peter in darkness when she went upstairs to collect her cell phone and did not see the victim coming down stairs since she met her in Peter's room earlier on that day.

The first witness, madam Cordwell also explained that the following morning she left the first accused, Peter at about 07:00 Hrs in the kitchen and on arrival again. She met the victim arranging the bed of Peter but maintained that there was no eye contact between her and the victim so she then shut the door slowly.

The case was adjourned for Wednesday 25th August.

Rape trial of Special Court official starts

Isata Lebbie

The man, who came to prosecute people indicted for bearing the greatest responsibility for war crimes in Sierra Leone, has found himself being tried on allegations of rape.

Peter Hallowan an Australian prosecutor in the Special Court for war crimes in Freetown is alleged to have raped a fourteen-year-old girl. Under Sierra Leonean law, any girl under 16 is presumed not to have attained the age of consent.

Sexual intercourse with a girl under sixteen is regarded as rape.

Peter Hallowan appeared for the second time Tuesday before magistrate Bankole Shyllon presiding over court No. 3 in Freetown. Also, on Tuesday, he, Sheka Fofana and Abdul Fofana, two brothers of the girl allegedly raped, were four living in the same house and I recall May 29, 2004. It was in the evening hours on Saturday, she recalled. Mandy said, adding that she had a discussion with Abdul Fofana one of the accused, who is a brother of the girl. She said, revealing to her that Hallowan asked him to find a girl to serve as a "maid" in his home. According to her, the second accused said Hallowan told him that the maid would take care of his three-year-old son. Mandy said she later saw the girl and offered her lift and dropped her at Mamba Point, an entertainment center and guest house at Wilberforce West of the capital Freetown. "I asked her what she would like to be in the future, she said she would like to be a nurse", Mandy said in court. She said on Mar 31, she was reversing her car and noticed that the girl was sitting in front of the apartment. Peter Hallowan, entered it. She said she enquired and was told Hallowan that the girl went to collect her mobile phone. "I went round and observed the bedroom and I discovered that the bed was in disarray", she said, adding that the girl by then was eating rice inside the house. Her testimony was stopped at this stage.

The prosecuting attorney S. K. Bah unlike the first time said he was not against bail.

Mr. J. B. Jenkins-Johnston, the lawyer defending Peter Hallowan, also pleaded with magistrate Bankole Shyllon to consider granting bail. The magistrate granted Hallowan and Abdul Fofana bail in the sum of Le 10 million. Tho magistrate ordered both sureties for the accused should be reporting to the nearest police station every morning at 7:30 am.

Officer bailed in sex case

THE former head of Victoria’s homicide squad facing child sex charges in Africa was last night free on bail.

Superintendent Peter Halloran, a special police investigator for the UN-backed Special Court in Sierra Leone, was granted bail of $5765 when he appeared at Freetown Magistrates’ Court.

The 30-year Victoria Police veteran faces charges related to indecently assaulting a 13-year-old girl.

He has previously denied the charge.

Hundreds filled the court and its corridor for the proceedings.

Supt Halloran appeared listless as his lawyer, Blyden Jenkins-Johnston, asked magistrate Bankole Shyllon to allow bail, which was not opposed by the prosecution.

The prosecution scrapped three charges and filed four new one against Supt Halloran.

Two brothers of the girl alleged to have been indecently assaulted were also charged.

The new charges include procuring an under-age girl to have unlawful carnal knowledge, indecent assault and conspiracy.

The incidents were alleged to have occurred between May and June this year.

First to give evidence was an assistant criminal investigator with the Special Court and fellow Australian Manley Cordwell. She told the court Supt Halloran was her boss and the pair rented a house with two other court officials.

She recalled returning home on June 2 when she was told by a member of the ground staff to ensure that all the water pumps in the building were turned off.

"I entered the house and went to the bedroom of the first accused to check the water pumps in the bathroom," she said.

"I saw a young girl sitting on Peter’s (Halloran) bed eating rice.

"I asked the girl how long she had been staying in the apartment and she replied for some days.

"Later that day, I returned home in the evening and noticed that the bedroom of Halloran was in darkness."

Ms Cordwell is to continue her testimony tomorrow.

Charged with Supt Halloran were the girl’s brothers, Sheka and Abdul Fofana.

Supt Halloran took up his post in Sierra Leone in January after taking unpaid leave from the Victoria Police force.

The Special Court deals with war atrocities committed during the west African country's civil war from November, 1996.

Vic officer faces Sierra Leone court

An Australian police officer charged with sex offences has appeared in court in Sierra Leone.

The former head of the Victorian homicide squad is accused of sexually abusing a teenage girl.

The court was told that Superintendent Peter Halloran had sexual contact with a 13-year-old girl.

The senior Victorian police officer has denied the charges.

Halloran was working as a war crimes investigator with the United Nations-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Court officials say they will cooperate with the police investigation.

An internal inquiry found there was not enough evidence to support the allegations.

But, Halloran was suspended from his position and was arrested by police.

The case is scheduled to resume tomorrow.

Halloran is expected to be released on bail.

THE sexual assault trial of a senior Australian police officer working as an investigator for the UN-backed war crimes court for Sierra Leone opened today.

Peter Halloran, a superintendent from the Victoria Police, faces an amended four-count indictment of abuse, conspiracy and procuring a minor for unlawful carnal relations for his alleged sexual relationship with a 13-year-old Freetown schoolgirl.

Brothers of the girl, whose name was not released, each face two counts of procuring a minor for unlawful carnal relations and conspiracy, according to the indictment read out by state prosecutor Suleiman Allieu Bah.

The war crimes court had conducted its own internal investigation in June, following a complaint filed by Manley Cordwell, Halloran's housemate and colleague.

Tribunal spokesman Peter Andersen told AFP last week that there had been no evidence to support any charges against Halloran but that the war court would cooperate fully with the Sierra Leone police investigation.

In brief testimony today, Cordwell told the court she first saw the girl on May 30, when she was brought to the house shared by Cordwell and Halloran to work as a nanny for the toddler son of Halloran's girlfriend.

She saw the girl three days later in Halloran's room.

"She was seated on the bed eating rice and cassava sauce and I asked her how long she had been there and she said for some days," Cordwell said. "After I went down the hall, I saw the lights go off in his room."

Halloran, 56, has been in custody since August 18 and his passport revoked. An order denying him bail was rescinded today by magistrate Bankole Shyllon and bail was set at 10 million leones ($5200).

Defence lawyer Blyden Jenkins-Johnston said bail would likely be paid today to speed Halloran’s release from Freetown’s maximum security prison.

"His employers (the war crimes court) have undertaken in writing that he will come to court whenever it is required," Jenkins-Johnston said following the hearing, which adjourned until tomorrow.

Halloran is in Sierra Leone on a UN contract as a prosecution investigator for the war court, which is judging those who bear the "greatest responsibility" for the decade of civil war that ravaged Sierra Leone until 2001.

His lawyer, Jenkins-Johnston, had served as lead counsel for one of the tribunal's highest profile defendants - former government minister Sam Hinga Norman.

Norman, who faces an eight-count indictment as head of the pro-government Civil Defence Forces militia, jettisoned his team of Sierra Leone and international lawyers on the first day of his trial in June.

U-S Congresswoman Sue Kelly Monday challenged the 9-11 commission about its investigation of reported links between al-Qaida and West African "blood diamonds." The commission's findings were discussed at a hearing of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Financial Services about identifying and preventing terrorist financing. The 9-11 commission is an independent, bipartisan commission created by Congress.

Ms. Kelly read from the report by the commission investigating the terrorist attacks in New York and Washington D.C. on September 11, 2001:

"The sentence is: We have seen no persuasive evidence that al-Qaida funded itself by trading in African conflict diamonds."

Ms. Kelly asked members of the 9-11 commission how they came to that decision. She noted that a number of sources reached conclusions different than those of the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Investigation cited in the 9-11 report.

Lee Hamilton, vice chairman of the 9-11 commission, noted that the report was the product of an ongoing investigation:

"There is some evidence that specific al Qaida operators may have dabbled in or maybe just expressed an interest in precious stones at some point. But what we're not able to do is to take that evidence and extrapolate from it and conclude that al Qaida funded itself in that manner."

Ms. Kelly listed a number of sources that have documented a link between al Qaida and diamonds from Sierra Leone. They include the U.S. and United Nations-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone and former Washington Post journalist Doug Farah, who wrote "Blood from Stones: The Secret Financial Network of Terror." The deputy commander of U.S.-European command, General Charles Wald, has also confirmed a link.

Ms. Kelly asked why two witnesses offered by the Sierra Leone special court in June were not interviewed. U.N. investigators said the informants could have shed light on the presence of al Qaida operatives involved in the diamond trade while based in Liberia, Sierra Leone's neighbor, prior to 9-11.

Mr. Hamilton said based on the available evidence the claims could not be substantiated. "But obviously you have to maintain an open mind here as I think the commission tried to do. We evaluated the sources of information for these various public reports. We checked the FBI records; we checked the CIA records. They came to the conclusion as you suggest in your question that there was no credible evidence ..."

Ms. Kelly says she simply wanted to know why Mr. Hamilton chose certain people chosen to interview, but others seem to have been left out such as two men that were suggested to him by the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Mr. Hamilton responded:

"I'll simply have to check that. I think we have checked either all of them directly or indirectly. But one of the things we were careful about was not to accept the word of anybody. We always looked for corroboration and we didn't find it in these cases."

The Sierra Leone Special Court witnesses might have been able to provide testimony about Khalifan Ghailani and Fazul Abdullah Mohamed. Both were implicated in the U.S. embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998. Mr. Mohamed was also implicated in the bombing of a tourist hotel and an attempt to shoot down an Israeli airliner in Mombassa in 2002.

Mr. Hamilton said it was necessary to draw a distinction between al Qaida and al Qaida operatives:
"If you have evidence that al Qaida, not al Qaida associated people. But if you have evidence that al Qaida itself was funded by conflict diamonds we're certainly open to that."

But U.S. officials said Mr. Ghaïlani is a senior al Qaida operative. He was arrested recently in Pakistan.

Mr. Mohamed is on the FBI's most wanted list.

CONGRESSWOMAN QUESTIONS LACK OF EVIDENCE OF AL-QAEDA BEING FUNDED BY DIAMONDS
August 25, 2004

During a hearing of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Financial Services about identifying and preventing terrorist financing, Sue Kelly, a United States Congresswoman, has questioned members of the 9/11 commission investigating the terror attacks on the country as to how they concluded that they found "no persuasive evidence that al Qaeda funded itself by trading in African conflict diamonds", citing a number of sources that reached different conclusions from the sources used in the 9/11 commission report.

They came to the conclusion that there was no credible evidence." explains Lee Hamilton, Vice Chairman of the bipartisan 9/11 commission, according to the Voice of America.

Kelly expressed a particular interest in finding out why two witnesses offered by the Sierra Leone special court in June that could have shed light on the presence of al Qaeda operatives involved in the diamond trade while based in Liberia according to U.N. investigators, were not interviewed.

Ms. Kelly asked members of the 9-11 commission how they came to that decision. She noted that a number of sources reached conclusions different than those of the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Investigation cited in the 9-11 report.

Lee Hamilton, vice chairman of the 9-11 commission, noted that the report was the product of an ongoing investigation:

"There is some evidence that specific al Qaida operators may have dabbled in or maybe just expressed an interest in precious stones at some point. But what we’re not able to do is to take that evidence and extrapolate from it and conclude that al Qaida funded itself in that manner."

Ms. Kelly listed a number of sources that have documented a link between al Qaida and diamonds from Sierra Leone. They include the U.S. and United Nations-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone and former Washington Post journalist Doug Farah, who wrote “Blood from Stones: The Secret Financial Network of Terror." The deputy commander of U.S.-European command, General Charles Wald, has also confirmed a link.

Ms. Kelly asked why two witnesses offered by the Sierra Leone special court in June were not interviewed. U.N. investigators said the informants could have shed light on the presence of al Qaida operatives involved in the diamond trade while based in Liberia, Sierra Leone’s neighbor, prior to 9-11.

Mr. Hamilton said based on the available evidence the claims could not be substantiated. "But obviously you have to maintain an open mind here as I think the commission tried to do. We evaluated the sources of information for these various public reports. We checked the FBI records; we checked the CIA records. They came to the conclusion as you suggest in your question that there was no credible evidence …"

Ms. Kelly says she simply wanted to know why Mr. Hamilton chose certain people chosen to interview, but others seem to have been left out such as two men that were suggested to him by the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Mr. Hamilton responded:

"I’ll simply have to check that. I think we have checked either all of them directly or indirectly. But one of the things we were careful about was not to accept the word of anybody. We always looked for corroboration and we didn’t find it in these cases."

The Sierra Leone Special Court witnesses might have been able to provide testimony about Khalifan Ghailani and Fazul Abdullah Mohamed. Both were implicated in the U.S. embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998. Mr. Mohamed was also implicated in the bombing of a tourist hotel and an attempt to shoot down an Israeli airliner in Mombassa in 2002.

Mr. Hamilton said it was necessary to draw a distinction between al Qaida and al Qaida operatives:
"If you have evidence that al Qaida, not al Qaida associated people. But if you have evidence that al Qaida itself was funded by conflict diamonds we're certainly open to that."

But U.S. officials said Mr. Ghailani is a senior al Qaida operative. He was arrested recently in Pakistan.

Mr. Mohamed is on the FBI's most wanted list.
Aussie cop denies abuse

From Freetown

An Australian senior investigator at Sierra Leone's UN-backed war crimes tribunal today pleaded not guilty in a Freetown court to sexually abusing a young teenage girl.

Peter Halloran, a Victoria Police superintendent on secondment to the war crimes tribunal, is accused of "unlawful carnal knowledge, indecent assault and procuring a girl under 14 years". He faces up to 15 years in prison if found guilty.

Local magistrate Bankole Shyllon granted bail to Halloran and two Sierra Leoneans charged in connection with the alleged crime. However, he confiscated their passports and told them to report to the police every day.

Halloran, 56, had been in custody since August 18. Bail was set at 10 million leones ($5200).

The case against Halloran is an embarrassment for the West African country's war crimes tribunal, set up to bring to justice those bearing the greatest responsibility for atrocities committed during its 10-year civil war.

Hidden behind wire-topped concrete walls in the centre of the sprawling capital and defended by UN troops, the special court is the first such tribunal to he held where the war crimes were committed. It is trumpeted as a model for other countries.

Manley Cordwell, a fellow Australian war crimes investigator who shared a house with Halloran, told the court the alleged victim had visited their home in the capital.

"I asked Halloran who the girl walking into our house was," she said. Halloran replied that he had employed the girl as a nanny, Cordwell said.

"She was seated on the bed eating rice and cassava sauce and I asked her how long she had been there and she said for some days," Cordwell said. "After I went down the hall, I saw the lights go off in his room."

Cordwell saw Halloran go into the room many times that night and never saw the girl leave the bedroom, she said. The following morning, she said she saw the girl making Halloran's bed.

Cordwell did not say today if she had witnessed any actual crime. Her testimony is expected to continue.

Defence lawyer Blyden Jenkins-Johnston said bail would likely be paid today to speed Halloran's release from Freetown's maximum security prison.

"His employers (the war crimes court) have undertaken in writing that he will come to court whenever it is required," Jenkins-Johnston said following the hearing, which adjourned until tomorrow.

Halloran is in Sierra Leone on a UN contract as a prosecution investigator for the war court, which is judging those who bear the "greatest responsibility" for the decade of civil war that ravaged Sierra Leone until 2001.
The special court suspended Halloran in June as soon as it became aware of the allegations against him, but an internal inquiry found insufficient evidence to support the accusation.

War in the former British colony - ranked bottom of the UN Human Development Index in 2004 - shocked the world with images of drugged up young gunmen and their mutilated victims.

The conflict was declared over in 2002 after some 50,000 people had been killed and a UN peacekeeping force numbering 17,500 people had disarmed 47,000 fighters.

Vic officer faces Sierra Leone court

An Australian police officer charged with sex offences has appeared in court in Sierra Leone.

The former head of the Victorian homicide squad is accused of sexually abusing a teenage girl.

The court was told that Superintendent Peter Halloran had sexual contact with a 13-year-old girl.

The senior Victorian police officer has denied the charges.

Halloran was working as a war crimes investigator with the United Nations-backed Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Court officials say they will cooperate with the police investigation.

An internal inquiry found there was not enough evidence to support the allegations.

But, Halloran was suspended from his position and was arrested by police.

The case is scheduled to resume tomorrow.

Halloran is expected to be released on bail.

CONGRESSWOMAN QUESTIONS LACK OF EVIDENCE OF AL-QAEDA BEING FUNDED BY DIAMONDS
August 25, 2004
During a hearing of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Financial Services about identifying and preventing terrorist financing, Sue Kelly, a United States Congresswoman, has questioned members of the 9/11 commission investigating the terror attacks on the country as to how they concluded that they found “no persuasive evidence that al Qaeda funded itself by trading in African conflict diamonds”, citing a number of sources that reached different conclusions from the sources used in the 9/11 commission report.

“There is some evidence that specific al Qaeda operators may have dabbled in or maybe just expressed an interest in precious stones at some point. But what we’re not able to do is to take that evidence and extrapolate from it and conclude that al Qaeda funded itself in that manner. We evaluated the sources of information for these various public reports. We checked the FBI records. We checked the CIA records. They came to the conclusion that there was no credible evidence,” explains Lee Hamilton, Vice Chairman of the bipartisan 9/11 commission, according to the Voice of America.

Kelly expressed a particular interest in finding out why two witnesses offered by the Sierra Leone special court in June that could have shed light on the presence of al Qaeda operatives involved in the diamond trade while based in Liberia according to U.N. investigators, were not interviewed.
Sierra Leone boosts police force ahead of UN troop reduction

FREETOWN, Aug 23 (AFP) - Sierra Leone has added 600 new officers to its 7,000-member police force in a bid to fill any security vacuum being left by the departing UN mission in the west African state, officials said Monday.

Police chief Brima Acha Kamara said officers were deploying around the country, most recently into the eastern diamond-rich Tongo Fields area, from where a battalion of Zambian soldiers withdrew last week.

At its peak, the UN operation in Sierra Leone following a decade of savage conflict was the world's largest, involving more than 17,000 peacekeepers in the disarmament and stabilization of the country no bigger than Scotland.

Five years and billions of dollars (euros) later, the mission, known as UNAMSIL, is winding down and set to include just 3,200 soldiers from Ghana, Pakistan and Nigeria assuring security come December.

Troops from former colonial power Britain are also forecast to remain in the Atlantic coastal country for an undetermined period.

UNAMSIL has assisted in the recruitment and training of new police cadets and military servicemembers, who are to ensure both border and internal security once the peacekeepers pull out completely.

"As a result of the UNAMSIL drawdown from the north, south and east of the country, we have taken full responsibility of the internal security in those areas," Kamara said Monday.

Sierra Leone's police force, which is expected to number 9,500 by the end of the year, plans to move into the Western area around the capital Freetown in late September, with an official handover of all responsibilities for security set for October.

Despite assurances from UN and Sierra Leone officials that there will be no security vacuum when UNAMSIL finally pulls stakes, citizens are wary about the challenges that will be confronting their as-yet untested law enforcement agencies.

Of particular concern are the border regions and diamond-mining areas that have been a lure not only for Sierra Leone's insurgents but also groups such as Hezbollah and al-Qaeda, according to documents from Western intelligence agencies and the UN-backed war crimes court currently operating in Freetown.
