President Obasanjo’s government is now persecuting members of the Coalition Against Impunity, campaigning for the transfer of Charles Taylor to face justice at the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

In early August, Nigeria’s State Security Service arrested several persons in connection with the distribution of Interpol red notices issued for Taylor. Members of the Coalition have also been declared wanted by Nigeria Security Services. Campaign posters of the Coalition have also been confiscated and offices of the Coalition printers have been shut down.

“We are shocked that President Obasanjo’s government is now persecuting members of the Coalition Against Impunity,” said Awofa Marx of the Coalition Against Impunity.

The actions of Obasanjo’s government come as Liberia heads towards democratic elections next month. There is no guarantee that Charles Taylor will not interfere in his country’s democratic process from Nigeria, where he is currently exiled.

President Obasanjo’s commitment to holding standards of the African Union of which he is the current chair, said David Mafud, Director of Political Affairs of the Global Pan African Movement.

Meanwhile African and International Organizations are urging ECOWAS and President Obasanjo of Nigeria to stop protecting Charles Taylor and to hand him over to the Special Court for Sierra Leone to face justice.

“ECOWAS and President Obasanjo must ensure that Charles Taylor does not become a tool to disrupt Nigeria’s electoral process and results,” said Mr. Shama, a member of the Coalition Against Impunity.

Early in September, the Coalition Against Impunity issued a joint press release following an earlier meeting. The Coalition accused Obasanjo of being shielded from justice by the Nigerian government, “Our actions were not motivated by any political motive,” said the Coalition.

OBASANJO SHIELDS FROM JUSTICE

Charles Taylor is responsible for launching 15 years of conflict which has affected four countries: Sierra Leone, Guinea, Cote D’Ivoire, and Liberia, claimed hundreds of thousands of lives and displaced millions,” she continued.

Mrs. Bangura further noted that the presidents of the sub-region have expressed concern over the capacity of Charles Taylor to destabilize their countries from Nigeria. Last July, Mano River Union presidents issued a communiqué asking President Obasanjo to review the terms of Taylor’s asylum.

Director of Justice Africa, Tajudeen Abdullahi, says justice is a necessary condition for peace. He says the best foundation for reconstruction of Liberia is for Taylor to face justice at the Special Court for Sierra Leone. “This will ensure that whatever government emerges in Liberia will not live under his violent shadow,” he said.

Charles Taylor is wanted by the Special Court for Sierra Leone on 18 counts charges of various war crimes. The upcoming elections present an ideal opportunity for Liberia to demonstrate a newly revitalized commitment to democracy.
Sierra Leone: UN mission chief calls on security forces to respect constitution
12 September - With only a few months left on the United Nations peacekeeping mission’s timetable in Sierra Leone, the mission chief has called on the nation’s security forces to respect the constitution by subjecting themselves to civilian authority and to build trust between themselves and the people of the West African country emerging from 12 years of civil war.

At the end of a one-week seminar on civil-military relations, organized by the UN Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) and conducted by the California-Based Naval Postgraduate School, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General, Ambassador Daudi Mwakawago, told the closing ceremony that security forces can only carry out their functions successfully when they have the support of the people. Community policing, therefore, is most vital in reinforcing police efforts towards maintaining safety and order, he said, warning against the excessive use of coercive power, which could lead the people to see the security forces as enemies rather than protectors.

Mr. Mwakawago exhorted seminar participants to undergo HIV/AIDS tests and take protective measures to safeguard themselves, their partners and their communities. In addition to civil war, Sierra Leone had experienced a number of coups over the past three decades. When the United Nations peacekeeping mission in Sierra Leone closes its doors next January, it will be succeeded by the UN Integrated Office in Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL), which will work closely with the Government to root out the causes of the conflict and address deficits in governance, human rights observance and the rule of law.
UN peacekeepers to leave Sierra Leone in December

Freetown, Sierra Leone, 09/12 - The last group of United Nations peacekeepers would leave Sierra Leone in December 2005, the chief spokesman of the UN Mission in the West African country, Daniel Adekera, told journalists here on Saturday.

Three days ago, the UN Security Council unanimously approved the establishment of the United Nations Integrated Office for Sierra Leone (UNIOSIL) in a resolution, saying it was crucial to prevent the country rebound from a decade-long civil war.

The United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) was established six years ago to restore peace and the rule of law in a country ravaged by cruel civil war in which rebels severed the limbs of citizens.

At one stage, UNAMSIL comprised 17,000 troops. The number has now been reduced to around 3,200 soldiers who are still in the country.

In a report earlier this year, UN secretary general Kofi Annan said that Sierra Leone had made impressive progress toward peace since the official end of war in early 2002.

He said the civil war in Sierra Leone shocked the world with its images of drugged up youngsters hacking off the arms, legs ears and lips of innocent civilians. Those behind the atrocities are currently on trial at the Special Court in Freetown.

Meanwhile, human rights activists argue that tensions still exist in the wider Sierra Leone community and that the government must help the victims.

Oluniyi Robin Coker, a New York-based Sierra Leonean who heads the Civil Coalition for Truth and Reconciliation said, “it's a good thing to have the UN integrated office, but it must look to channel its energies to implementing the truth and reconciliation recommendations.”

Liberian presidential candidates consult with Charles Taylor
• Former Liberian leader holds court in Calabar, still calls the shots

By JUDE OKWE, Calabar

Former Liberian President, Charles Taylor still maintains a commanding influence in Liberia’s politics as some presidential candidates in next month’s election have been consulting with him in Calabar, Cross River State.

Though Taylor has repeatedly denied having anything to do with the politics at home, his asylum abode in Calabar has in recent times played host to the emissaries of the presidential candidates.

The candidates, according to NewAge findings in Calabar, send trusted aides to Taylor to seek his opinion on certain issues and his imprimatur for their candidature.

PRESS CONFERENCE BY EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, UN OFFICE ON DRUGS AND CRIME

The entry into force of the Convention against Corruption was days away and could come as early as next week, Antonio Maria Costa, Under-Secretary-General and Executive Director of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), said at a Headquarters press conference today.

Responding to a question about the repatriation of assets looted by former African leaders, he said the Convention contained all the legal instruments that would force countries to repatriate such funds. Regarding the banks holding those funds, he said that at the moment only very few developed countries had ratified the Convention, and in Europe, only France had done so. However, all the others would ratify it, as would the United States which had do so as a matter of principle.

The Convention stated very clearly that banking secrecy -- the traditional impediment to repatriation of assets -- could no longer be used to protect funds illegally exported from one country and illegally detained in a third.

Mr. Costa was briefing correspondents on a UNODC assessment of crime in Africa. The investigation was aimed at helping the continent overcome a very dramatic situation regarding violence, corruption, urban crime and money laundering, as well as trafficking in human beings, narcotics and arms.

 Asked how crime in sub-Saharan Africa compared with that of North Africa and what he recommended in dealing with corruption, he said the report was fundamentally about sub-Saharan Africa, which was more greatly affected by the problems of underdevelopment and poverty than the North. The statistics showed that homicide rates in sub-Saharan Africa were higher, while the rate of convictions for homicide was the lowest in the world. The incidence of rape and violence against individuals was worse in sub-Saharan Africa than in North Africa.

Regarding corruption, he said the political leadership must take the lead and demonstrate accountability. Unfortunately, some of the most tragic cases of corruption involved former dictators -- including Nigeria’s Sanni Abacha, Mobutu Sese Seko in the former Zaire, and Charles Taylor of Liberia, as well as more recent cases -- who looted the public coffers. The strongest recommendation was to strengthen the judicial system, because a healthy, honest judiciary could put everything else into shape.
