Special Court Supplement
New President for the Special Court for Sierra Leone

Justice George Gelaga King of Sierra Leone has been elected Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber, a post which makes him President of the Special Court for a period of one year. Justice King succeeds President Justice Raja Fernando of Sri Lanka, whose term ended on 26 May.

Justice George Gelaga King has been President of the Sierra Leone Court of Appeal and of Court of Appeal of The Gambia. He served as Sierra Leone's Ambassador to France.

Justice King taught law at the Sierra Leone Law School from 1990 to 2005. He is Chairman of both the Sierra Leone Law Journal and the Gambian National Council for Law Reporting, and was a member of the Sierra Leone Council of Legal Education. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. He has been a Judge of the Special Court for Sierra Leone since December 2002.

The Appeals Court Judges also selected Justice Emmanuel Ayoola of Nigeria as Vice-President. He will succeed Justice Renate Winter of Austria.
DOWNBELOW: SIR ALBERT CONVERSES WITH MARAH & TEACHER LAGAWO—EPISTLE 6 / PART 3

Sir Albert opined, "Tejan could have set an example by appointing Victor Foh of the APC as cabinet minister. But why was he not pleased with Victor Foh?"

Teacher Lagawo answered, "Sir Albert, as in the case of Victor Foh, the rejection by parliament of Sheki Bangura, George Geleka King and Dr. S. S. Banya was due to parliamentary screening. In fact, Tejan even expressed resentment on SLBS Radio over nominees rejected by parliament."

Again Sir Albert asked, "O.K. gentlemen, now that you have elected a president and parliament, who acted as Speaker of Parliament?"

In unison, Marah and Teacher Lagawo replied, "Justice Sheku Kutubu."

Sir Albert observed, "You had earlier informed me that Justice Kutubu served as Chief Justice, is that so?"

Marah replied, "When he retired from the position of Chief Justice, he was replaced by Justice Samuel Beccles Davies."

Sir Albert wobbled his head and said, "Wonderful all these old names ring a bell. Alright, so did the new government commence work immediately?"

Together, Teacher Lagawo and Marah responded, "Yes, Sir Albert."

Again, Sir Albert posed the question, "So, what else?"

Teacher Lagawo responded, "The top priority of the government was to end the rebel war as was promised."

Sir Albert again asked, "Oh the war? That Bio boy had already initiated dialogue with the rebels, is that not so?"

Teacher Lagawo responded, "Yes, we had to continue from that point although the rebel war was still raging. However, the then Deputy Minister of Defense, Sam Hinga Norman had an idea."

Sir Albert observed, "Gentlemen, don't let me recall the past. Was Hinga Norman appointed Deputy Minister of Defense?"

He was an asset in my army while I served as Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Left to him alone, my government could not have been kicked out of power."

Marah observed, "It is the opinion of some people that Hinga Norman arrested the then Governor General while Siaka Stevens was being sworn into office as Prime Minister, is that not so Sir Albert?"

Sir Albert replied, "It will be a long episode during this conversation if we attempt to debate the role of George Geleka King Norman in the 1967 event. Actually, gentlemen, the NRC set up the Dove Edwin Commission of Inquiry to investigate the circumstances that led to the 1967 political upheaval in the country. People should read these reports to ascertain the facts. Anyway, Hinga Norman was loyal to me and Lansana. I know many people were apprehensive of him because of the allegations leveled against him. So what was this idea about advanced by Hinga Norman?"

Teacher Lagawo responded, "Hinga Norman advanced the concept that since the citizenry no longer had confidence in the military, a civil defense militia be strengthened and armed to pursue the rebels."

Sir Albert observed, "Gentlemen, you mean the civil militia formed by Alpha Lavelle?"

Teacher Lagawo replied, "Yes, the strengthening and arming of the civil defense militia."

Sir Albert asked, "How did you go about it?"

Teacher Lagawo responded, "Hinga approached me with the suggestion that the responsibility of ending the war squarely rests on our shoulders because the SLPP was erroneously conceived by many Sierra Leoneans as a southeastern party. In fact, non-Southeasterners accused our own people of starting the war. So, it was high time something was done to end the war."

Civilian killed, his head paraded in wheelbarrow

By Betty Millon
A nswering questions from the Defence lawyer, a witness, Kinnie Toma Kanneh, has told the Special Court of how the Treasury Clerk of Moyamba, one Mr. Thomas, was killed by civilians and his head placed in a wheelbarrow and paraded in the township.

Ms 5-year-old witness disclosed that he knew Madam Ella Kobolo Golama, the then Paramount Chief of Moyamba District, and that she too was leading Kamajors’ efforts to defend her land.

The witness maintained that while he was in Bonthe, he heard that during their second attack of Kamajors’ positions in Moyamba, the rebels were able to dislodge them from that district.

After the dislodgement of the Kamajors, Ella Kobolo Golama took refuge at Runle, while other chiefs in various districts agreed that the Kamajors should assist in repelling the rebels from Moyamba.

Mr. Kanneh stated that the counter-attack did not take long. Though they had no guns, with only cutlasses and sticks they chased out the rebels but that a total of 40 houses were burnt down.

The witness confirmed that after the fight, they were told by the chiefs to hold the fort in Moyamba so that the people would be protected. It was at this juncture, the witness went on, that one Chuck Norris was appointed as head by members of the War Council at a meeting held at Talia. “I was also appointed deputy to Chuck Norris,” he revealed.

The defence lawyer, Dr. Bu-Buake Jabbie after going through the transcript of the witness, asked whether he knew one Mr. Thomas who was killed in Moyamba? To this, the witness said: “Yes.”

Narrating further, Mr. Kanneh stated that one day he was met by one Mustapha Ngobeh who told him that, “he had received a report from people that Mr. Thomas had been sending letters to the rebels at Camp Charlie about the activities of the Kamajors and that after they had searched him, they saw a letter in his bag which was written to him by the rebels.” He went on: “Early one morning, I saw a crowd of people moving along Sembehun Road. When I joined them I saw the head of a man in a wheelbarrow driven by civilians who were singing. When I saw this, I immediately ran to Ngobeh’s house and asked him why he handed over the man to civilians. He told me that it was the civilians who requested that Mr. Thomas be bought to them.”
Trials of Charles Taylor unlikely to proceed this year

Former Liberian President Charles Taylor's defence team has some reading to do before his war-crimes trial begins -- 32,000 pages of documents and witness statements compiled by prosecutors.

That gives them plenty to do while officials work out where the trial will be held and where the accused warlord might be jailed if convicted.

Liberian President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf and the joint Sierra Leone-United Nations tribunal want the trial held outside of West Africa because of security concerns. The Netherlands has agreed to host it, but only if Taylor leaves immediately after -- convicted or not.

So far, no nation has agreed to take Taylor in, and the trial is unlikely to begin until some nation does.

Speaking in London on Wednesday, Johnson-Sirleaf said she was optimistic a European Union country would break the impasse. Her information minister, Johnny McClain, stressed on Friday that Liberia had no control over the matter.

"It is the prerogative of the court," he told The Associated Press.

On Thursday, Sweden's Parliament approved a law making it possible for the Scandinavian country to imprison Taylor if he is convicted -- though Sweden has not yet officially decided whether it would do so and previously rejected requests to jail him. Denmark and Austria also rejected requests.

The Sierra Leone Special Court was established by the UN and Sierra Leone to try those accused of bearing the greatest responsibility for atrocities during that country's 1991-2002 civil war. Taylor faces 11 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity stemming from his alleged backing of Sierra Leonean rebels who terrorised victims by chopping off their arms, legs, ears and lips.

While the charges refer only to Sierra Leone, Taylor is accused of fomenting violence in his homeland and elsewhere in West Africa.

He was transferred into the custody of the Sierra Leone court in late March from exile in Nigeria.

Prosecuting attorneys completed investigations last month and furnished Taylor's defence team with the 32,000 pages of documents, which they have six months to review, said Peter Andersen, a spokesperson for the UN-backed war-crimes court.

"The trial definitely is not expected to start before the end of this year," Andersen told The Associated Press this week.
Sando Johnson, who served as a member of Parliament during Taylor's ousted regime, said he met Taylor in detention at the court complex in Sierra Leone in early May and the former warlord expressed concern about the trial.

"The former president told me all he wants is a fair and speedy trial," said Johnson, speaking in the Liberian capital, Monrovia.

The court last week dismissed a motion filed by Taylor's lawyer, who is pressing to keep the trial in Sierra Leone. Taylor says his witnesses and relatives will not be able to attend if the trial is moved to Europe.

Andersen said a trial in Europe would require more money, in part to cover witnesses' travel costs, and three additional judges. The court runs off voluntary funding from UN member states.

"Money would have to be found," Andersen said. "This is being looked at the moment."

The new president of the UN-backed war crimes court in Sierra Leone, Justice George Gelaga King, is expected in the coming days to make the final call on whether to try former Liberian president Charles Taylor in Sierra Leone or The Hague in the Netherlands.

Taylor faces charges of war crimes in Sierra Leone including murder, rape and providing financial support for Sierra Leone rebel fighters who terrorised civilians, hacking off their hands and feet.

If Justice King decides to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor and push for Taylor’s trial to be moved to The Hague, the indictments will still be served under jurisdiction of the Sierra Leone Special Court but will use the high security facilities of the International Criminal Court in The Hague.

Or, King could make an about turn and lobby to keep the landmark trial in Sierra Leone.

This week the Appeals Chamber of the Special Court dismissed a motion forwarded by Taylor’s lawyers asking the court president to withdraw his predecessor’s request to shift the trial to The Hague. Taylor’s lawyers argue that their client will not get a fair trial there.

The Court dismissed the motion ruling that “at this stage of the proceedings, matters relating to the venue of the Taylor trial are exclusively within the administrative and diplomatic mandate of the president”.

The location of Taylor’s trial has divided Sierra Leoneans. Some are hungry to see an African president brought to justice on African soil, while others fear that his presence could destabilise the country and even the whole sub-region.

Also this week the head of the Nigerian Armed Forces, General Martin-Luther Agwai said the Nigerian army would give evidence against Taylor if invited to do so by the Special Court.
Charles Taylor could serve prison sentence in Sweden

Swedish lawmakers have approved a law that makes it possible for the Scandinavian country to imprison former Liberian president Charles Taylor if he is convicted of war crimes by a UN-backed tribunal, government officials said on Thursday.

The decision by the Swedish parliament could remove a major obstacle that has stalled the former warlord's trial in Sierra Leone. Foreign Ministry officials said Sweden had not yet officially decided whether it would accept a request to take in Taylor. Such a step would need final approval from the government.

The UN-backed court asked the Netherlands-based International Criminal Court to host the trial, fearing Taylor's trial in Africa might revive regional instability. The Netherlands has agreed to host the trial -- on condition a third country agrees to jail Taylor if he is convicted.

Sweden had previously rejected the request to take Taylor, saying Parliament had not approved a special agreement with the Sierra Leone court that would make it possible for him to serve a possible sentence in the Scandinavian country.

Besides Sweden, Denmark and Austria had previously rejected requests to accept him.

The legal obstacle in Sweden was removed on Wednesday when Parliament approved such an agreement with the court that takes effect on July 1.

Kerstin Olsson, a spokeswoman for Sweden's foreign minister, referred to Sweden's previous rejection of the request, but would not say whether the government would alter its stance because of Parliament's decision.

"The government has said no," Olsson said. "No new decision has been taken since the law was approved."

Taylor faces 11 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity stemming from his alleged backing of Sierra Leonean rebels who terrorized victims by chopping off their arms, legs, ears and lips.

He was transferred into the custody of the Sierra Leone court in late March from exile in Nigeria. While the charges refer only to Sierra Leone, Taylor is accused of fomenting violence in his homeland and elsewhere in West Africa has well.

In London on Wednesday, Liberian President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf told reporters that holding the trial in west Africa would be risky for her fledgling government.

Taylor still has supporters in Liberia, some of whom won seats in parliament in elections held at the same time as the presidential vote she won last year.

Sweden has agreements on jailing war criminals with other UN courts.
Former Bosnian Serb president Biljana Plavsic is serving an 11-year sentence in a high-security prison west of Stockholm.

Miroslav Deronjic, the top wartime authority in the eastern Bosnian city of Bratunac during the 1992-1995 Bosnian War, was transferred from The Hague to Sweden last year, and is serving a 10-year sentence for ordering the destruction of a Muslim village. This story has been viewed 236 times.
Libya's Gadhafi critical of hand over

TRIPOLI, Libya - Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi expressed criticism Thursday for the handing over of exiled Liberian President Charles Taylor to the United Nations on war crimes charges.

Speaking at the opening of a one-day summit of the 23 regional countries, Gadhafi did not name Nigeria - the country that delivered Taylor to the U.N. - but he said the decision to surrender the Liberian had tarnished Africa's image.

"Handing over former Liberian President Charles Taylor to an international court is an immoral act and has harmed Africa," Gadhafi said, adding that his view did not mean he supported Taylor's policies.

"Taylor should have stayed in Nigeria according to the agreement under which he stepped down," Gadhafi said, who has recently improved once-strained ties with the United States and other Western nations.

Taylor, Liberia's president in 1997-2003, was arrested in April after fleeing the Nigerian home where he was being kept under house arrest. He had gone to Nigeria at the invitation of its government after international pressure forced him to step down in 2003.

The Nigerian authorities handed him over to the U.N.-special court in Sierra Leone, where he has been charged on 11 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity during the country's civil war.

The Libyan leader accused foreign powers of instigating Africa's disputes, and urged the continent's leaders to settle their quarrels.

"The group should overcome disputes as they are a challenge that leads to instability and the impediment of development," Gadhafi said.

"All the disputes on the African continent are moved by foreign fingers," he added, without naming the foreign countries.

Despite the strong words, Gadhafi has drawn closer to the outside world and has renounced weapons of mass destruction and agreed to cooperate in the hunt for terrorists.

Rewarding those action, the U.S. said it would restore full diplomatic relations with Libya and remove it from a list of terrorism sponsors.
Sweden Passes Law Allowing Charles Taylor Imprisonment

By Joe De Capua

If former Liberian leader Charles Taylor is convicted of war crimes and crimes against humanity, there’s a good chance he would serve his sentence in a Swedish prison. That’s because, this week, the Swedish parliament passed a law making it possible for him to serve time there. However, no formal decision by the Swedish government has been announced yet. Many countries had rejected requests to accept Taylor, as did Sweden prior to passing the new law.

David Crane is the former chief prosecutor at the UN backed Special Court for Sierra Leone and the man who signed Charles Taylor’s indictment. In Washington, he spoke to VOA English to Africa Service reporter Joe De Capua about the new Swedish law.

“The Swedes have been great supporters of international criminal law both at The Hague, as well as in West Africa. I had a great relationship with their foreign office and their justice ministry.”

Immigration and domestic laws have played a role in many countries rejecting a request to imprison Taylor should he be convicted. But does politics also play a role? Crane says, “It’s both of those situations…certainly in any of these situations politics does play a role…so, it’s a matter of politics, practicality and the law.”

As for the likelihood that Taylor will be both tried and possibly imprisoned outside of Africa, Crane says, “The key is to seek justice for the people of West Africa and to have fair trial and to look all the facts. And should he be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt to have him incarcerated in a place that is safe and that he can also be protected…It’s both sides of the coin…again we want to show that the law is fair…I have a personal feeling that it would be nice to see him tried in West Africa…the law has brought down the most powerful warlord in Africa and humbled him before the law. And I think that is a great signal to the people of Africa that their lives matter.”
Charles Taylor in Sierra Leone: Was it More Than Money?

Written by Rene Wadlow

Charles Taylor has been indicted on 17 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity in violation of international humanitarian law. However, the trial has not yet been held, and it will be of interest to see what elements of proof will be presented.

Charles Taylor’s direct participation in war crimes was in Liberia where he still has too many supporters for a trial to be held there. His actions in Sierra Leone were indirect in support of insurgencies whose crimes were many. But it is not clear what control Taylor had over their actions.

The two main insurgents, Foday Sankoh and his deputy, Sam "Mosquito" Bocharie, that Taylor is thought to have armed and advised, have died. They can neither be tried nor asked to testify against Taylor. Three persons, including a US citizen, have been arrested in Sierra Leone for plotting to spring Taylor from jail. These are probably not the only persons promised funds to get Taylor out. Thus, we may be some way from hearing the evidence against Taylor.

Taylor’s support for Foday Sankoh and his Revolutionary United Front (RUF) was certainly well rewarded in money. The "Blood Diamond" trade as it was called flowed from the diamond fields held by the RUF through Liberia to Europe, Israel and the Far East. Taylor, nicknamed "Superglue" was able to skim off money from everything he touched. There is little doubt that Taylor "got a cut" from the flow out of diamonds and the flow in of arms. He added Sierra Leone timber to his vast timber exports he controlled in Liberia.

The are currently two unanswered questions: How much did Charles Taylor advise on the strategies of the insurgency in Sierra Leone? Were the insurgencies in Sierra Leone and Liberia part of a wider program of destabilization of West Africa —perhaps in the interest of Libya? Charles Taylor and Foday Sankoh had been together in revolutionary training camps in Libya after Charles Taylor escaped from jail in the USA. How long they stayed together in Libya and what they learned in the camps has not yet been established. What is known is that Foday Sankoh, who had been a professional soldier in Sierra Leone, was with Taylor when Taylor began his attack on Liberia from a base in the Ivory Coast on Christmas Eve 1989.

Foday Sankoh stayed with Taylor while Taylor’s troops advanced toward Monrovia, but Taylor could not take Monrovia on his first try being blocked by West African peacekeeping forces. Taylor withdrew to areas he held and developed his timber export business. Sankoh, perhaps less interested in making money than in gaining power brought together a small armed force and in 1991 attacked Sierra Leone from Liberia.

Liberia and Sierra Leone had similar social structures, and the military insurgencies were carried out in the same way. Was Taylor part of the planning for the attack on Sierra Leone? Was there a master strategist in Libya who had trained and advised both Sankoh and Taylor? Conspiracy theories grow quickly on tropical forest soil, but they are not necessarily false.

Sierra Leone like Liberia had been founded by freed slaves. Liberia’s founders had been for the most part household slaves or artisans in the northeast states of the USA before being sent to Africa. Many could read and write and had participated in a "developed" country. Sierra Leone’s founders were recently freed slaves who were aboard ships taking them from Africa to the West Indies. The slave ships were stopped by the British Navy who controlled the West African coast. There were also slaves freed from slave forts along the coast who were waiting for ships. Although there were a few slaves from Canada and Jamaica, most of the freed slaves were not more educated than the tribes of Sierra Leone’s interior. They, nevertheless, reproduced the same pattern as Liberia: a coastal, detribalized group who took up trade and looked down upon the tribes of the interior. When Sierra Leone developed into a British colony, it was normal that the coastal population was first to benefit from education and joined English firms. The coastal population was also the first to create modern political parties on the eve of independence in 1961.

The Sierra Leone government after independence was even more corrupt than that of Liberia. The Sierra Leone governing class played a "winner take all" game of power while Liberia’s was more a "share the wealth among us" pattern. Thus Sierra Leone politics was more brutal, and the power/wealth circle smaller than Liberia’s.

As with Charles Taylor, Foday Sankoh had no tribal authority on which to draw. He followed Charles Taylor’s lead and established an armed force of "child soldiers" — disenchanted and impoverished youth for whom Sankoh became "Papa" and Sankoh received son-like devotion on the part of the troops. In return, the troops could loot everything they could carry and rape all the women they could catch.

The badge of belonging to the group was to mutilate: to cut off hands, arms, feet, ears or noses of the defeated or of the ordinary villages they controlled. Such mutilation was both a sign of being part of the "in group" but also made them outcasts from traditional society so they could not be easily integrated. They had to remain loyal to Sankoh. Other insurgencies in Sierra Leone such as the AFRC and the pro-governmental Civil Defence Force learned the same pattern and acted no differently. Thus there are leaders from all these forces who are to be tried for war crimes.

Sierra Leone seems even less able to recover from the years of war than Liberia. The economy destroyed, the society is fragile. The court trials are probably a first but necessary step to move beyond havoc.

Oxford Analytica (UK) 06/02/2006
Liberia: Challenges remain for president's bold plan

EVENT: President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf’s "First 150 Day Action Plan" is due to be completed on June 30.

SIGNIFICANCE: The democratically elected Johnson Sirleaf administration has given itself until June 30 to achieve wide-ranging reforms in the security, economy, infrastructure and governance sectors. However, Monrovia's commitment to end the degenerative status quo risks medium-term destabilization of still powerful domestic interest groups. ANALYSIS: President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf, who was inaugurated in January, inherited a country devastated by a decade of military rule, 14 years of intermittent civil war and then 27 months of transitional governance by combatant parties. Capitalizing on solid support from Western governments and development agencies, Africa's first elected female president announced a radical reform programme in mid-April.
